CAIRO — President Hosni Mu-barak of Egypt said Friday that Iran and Libya wight be responsi-ble for laying mines in the Red Sea and the Gulf of Suez and warned that Egypt would deny use of the Suez Canal to ships from any coun-try proven to be involved.

Marshal Abu Ghazala said Egypt was "70 percent sure" Iran and Libya were to blame for the series of explosions in which at least 13 ships were damaged in the past month in the Red Sea and Suez region.

"If we find somebody responsi-ble," Mr. Mubarak said, "we are going to use Article 10 of the Constantinople Convention." U.S. Bishop Rejects Politicians' Views of Morality

Bishop Malone's statement began by noting that the U.S. Catholic Conference, the secular affairs arm of the church, "does not take positions for or against political candidates. This point needs emphasizing lest, in the present political context, even what we say about issues be perceived as an expression of political partisanship."

Russell B. Shaw, a Catholic Conference spokesman, said that, to avoid the appearance of partisan-ship, Bishop Malone had intended to release the statement after the completion of both national nominating conventions but that leaks had forced an earlier release.

The Roman Catholic Church has recently taken a more assertive position on public policy issues. Last year, the conference, in a pastoral letter, condemned nuclear war and urged steps toward disarmament.

That letter and Bishop Malone's statement Thursday drew a distinction between the church's stance on ssues such as education, nutrition, housing and health care, where, according to the statement, there is room for sincere disagreement by Catholics and others who share our moral convictions over how moral principles should be applied to the current facts in the public policy debate," and life-and-death issues such as abortion and nuclear war.

The statement said the church's stands on issues involving the "direct taking of innocent human life," whether by abortion or in war, "are a direct affirmation of the constant moral teaching of the Catholic Church.'

The East German Communist Party daily, Neues Deutschland, urged a return to "peaceful eco-nomic and political relations" through dialogue in comments by Herbert Haeber, a member of the ruling Politburo and East Germany's senior expert on relations with West Germany.

His remarks were perceived by Western diplomats and analysts as East Germany's most authoritative endorsement yet of cooperation with the West since the Soviet Union intensified its warnings last month about the dangers of close links between the two German

Mr. Haeber said "it must be the aim of every sensible policy" to stop "rearmament and oppose con-frontation and turn the wheel back toward disarmament and détente."

The Soviet press Friday renewed its attacks on improved ties between East Berlin and Bonn in what Western diplomats saw as a move to increase pressure on the East German leader, Erich Honecker, to moderate his détente poli-

East Germany's willingness to promote improved channels of diaogue with the West at a time when Moscow has sought to freeze relamats, who have long considered Mr. Honecker one of the Kremlin's most loyal allies.

East bloc analysts said they found it difficult to believe that Mr. Honecker would show such defiance of Soviet views unless he was assured of some high-level support in Moscow for conciliatory overtures to the West.

Some diplomats theorize that under the apparently weak leader-ship of Konstantin U. Chernenko, the Soviet Politburo has split into different factions over how to approach the West after the failure to block deployment of cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Western Europe last winter.

While the Soviet Communist Party daily, Pravda, has criticized the recent $330-million credit to East Germany as an attempt by Bonn to undermine the socialist system, the Soviet government dai-(Continued on Page 2, Col. 4)

House, in Compromise, Votes Aid for Salvador

The Associated Press WASHINGTON — The House has approved a $70-million emer gency military aid package for El Salvador in a 234-161 vote.

Representative John P. Murtha Democrat of Pennsylvania, one of the sponsors of the compromise approved Friday, said he believed an agreement had been reached with the Republican-controlled Senate to accept it.

Although the House originally refused to grant El Salvador additional military aid in this fiscal year, Representative Dante B. Los Angeles Times Service SHENYANG, China - Since Yankee traders first visited China two centuries ago, American businessmen have dreamed of the fortunes to be made by selling in the vast Chinese market, but have found it largely closed to foreigners.

Now, a few American companies Coca-Cola, Gillette, Kodak and R.J. Reynolds — are starting to manufacture and market the first foreign consumer products for general sale in this country.

"The old idea of selling hundreds of millions of Chinese just one or two boxes of matches is finally becoming possible," says Philip Hung, general manager of the Gillette company's joint venture company that makes razor blades here. "Whether we will make the proverbial fortune selling razor blades to a couple of hundred million Chinese men, we don't know yet, but China is a huge, huge market and, at last, we are

"We are results-oriented — certain results have to be achieved in the time specified - and they like this, although it has required many changes in the way of operating here."

Mr. Hung cites as an example the changes in personnel policy. In agreeing to pay local employees at least 20 percent more than they were earning before, the joint venture screened the 240 workers of the old razor-blade factory it took over from the Chinese partner and kept only 60 of them. As Hard-Core Activists Are Released, Solidarity Has Trouble Reorganizing

New York Times Service
WARSAW — With more and more hard-core Solidarity activists being freed under the terms of a government amnesty, Poland's outlawed trade union movement is finding it difficult to unify and reorganize its ranks.

For one thing, it has all but lost its rallying cry, the demand to free political prisoners. For another, Solidarity has sprouted potentially contentious branches since it was hanned at the end of 1981 and its leaders were imprisoned.

The position of the government is that the situation has normalized to the point where dissidents need not be imprisoned, but that they cannot be allowed to organize campaigns that might shake the framework of the Communist system. An editorial in last Saturday's

August: Romans Put Out the Cat — for Good By Don A. Schanche dogs but everyone agreed that the animals distributors go off on holiday, too, or work

Los Angeles Times Service
ROME — Huge banners blazon the message "Don't abandon him!" in the city's

They were put up by municipal authorities in a vain effort to dissuade vacationing masters of dogs and cats from abandoning their pets to the streets and squares of the city. Hundreds of thousands of dogs and im merable cats have already been left behind and the traditional August holiday season is not even two weeks old. In Padua, several dogs have been found throttled, apparently by masters too heartless to arrange for their care during the holiday. As in much of Europe, the August vacation is seen as an inahenable right of virtually the whole populace, and it is not only pets that are left behind.

A man and his sister in Milan squabbled over whose turn it was to care for their invalid 80-year-old mother. Each tried to get the police to force the other to take her. When that failed, Francesco Vaccaro, 42, put his mother into the back seat of his car, parked her in front of his sister Rita's house and took

Police later took the bedridden and senile Maria Vaccaro to a hospital, tracked down her offspring and jailed them both.

Abandonment had tragic results at a Turin truck park. The owner had locked up for the August break and left six Alsatian guard dogs fenced in to watch the property. Newspaper reports disagreed over whether the owner

A branch of the government workers' union complained in a letter to the minister of civil service that the closure of bars and canteens was causing "serious discomfort to ministry workers."

In Turin, so many bakeries have closed that a housewife complained to the newspaper La Stampa that she had to walk miles to find a loaf of bread. Another newspaper reported two-hour lines at one of the few meat markets still open.

While the usual tragic highway statistics reached their annual August peak — 290 deaths on Italian roads in the first week of August — the streets of the major cities are deserted. A Roman woman who remained in town to care for her ailing mother expressed delight. "I can park anywhere," she said.

Asked how this year compared with previwithout a safety net. The number of deaths ous years, she exclaimed: "How would I know? If it weren't for Mother, I wouldn't be "When the big cities empty, many drug caught dead in Rome in August."

Home With a Pet Is a Happy Home

Pet owners don't just think they're happier. They know they are, or so they have told Psychology Today magazine.

A survey of 13,000 pet owners, published in the magazine's August issue, found that pet owners believed they were more satisfied with their lives and were less lonely or bored than people who did not have pets. Three-fourths say that their pet has increased fun and laughter in their family, and nine out of 10 say their pet is "extremely" or "very" important to them. Half the pet owners allow

Amusement Parks:

People who go on the rides at amusement parks are playing "amusement ride roulette" with their safety, says the chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission, Nancy Harvey Steorts.

Are the Rides Safe?

The commission is seeking authority from Congress to investigate amusement park acci-dents after at least 12 amusement park deaths this year, the latest on July 28 when a boy fell from a roller coaster in North Dakota. Last year, the commis sion estimates, there were al-most 10,000 injuries on rides. The amusement park industry opposes broader federal control, contending that far more children are hurt on tricycles than on park rides.

That blunt approach nettled some lobbyists, one of whom called it "pretty gauche." But it worked. As of June, Mr. Morrison had gathered $7,000 from political action committees, PACs, concerned with banking legislation. Mr. Morrison defended his calls. He said soliciting campaign money from those affected by committee actions was "standard practice."

A Simple Space Question

The Soviet-American impasse about a space negotiation turns on one critical question: Should weapons be banned from space or should they merely be limited?

The Kremlin says it wants to ban space arms, starting with anti-satellite weapons. To negotiate, it wants a moratorium on ASAT testing. It offers to destroy its own primitive ASAT's and to accept verification against their replacement; how adequate such verification would be, only negotiation would reveal. Congress has so far supported a negotiation and deferral of American ASAT tests to find out.

The Reagan administration proposes not to prohibit but to limit ASAT deployment. It is producing a sophisticated ASAT for deployment by 1987. The first test against a target in space is planned for late fall. If successful, it could make the ASAT race irreversible.

In the discussion so far, one word reveals this fundamental difference of approach. The United States refuses to accept the Soviet proposal that negotiations aim to "prevent" the militarization of space. It wants talks "concerning" the militarization of space.

Behind the administration's semantic shield lies a flawed policy decision. It contends that it must proceed with an anti-satellite weapon because a ban could not be reliably verified and would leave the Soviet Union with a military advantage: possession of the world's only "operational" ASAT. The Soviet lowaltitude ASAT, however, is primitive and no threat to America's most important satellites, which are in high orbit; even if secretly resuscitated during a ban, the Soviet weapon could be readily offset by defensive measures. But the evolving low-altitude American ASAT, once tested and deployed, could not easily be banned. It is launched from F-15 jet fighters, whose flights would be hard to distinguish from other F-15 flights the world over.

What really drives the American ASAT program is not the stated fear of a Soviet advantage, or even doubt about verification, but a conviction that a superior ASAT would give America an important military edge.

That is a serious miscalculation. Without a total ASAT ban, the Russians will have no great difficulty catching up or leapfrogging the American effort, ultimately threatening America's most important early warning and communications satellites. And then it will truly be too late for a verifiable ban.

The real question is whether America would be more secure in the 1990s with effective ASATs on both sides, or on neither side. A similar question was pushed aside during de-velopment of independently targeted multiple warbeads. Thus a brief American advantage was followed by Soviet MIRV deployments that are now seen as a grave disadvantage.

Congress was wise to require last year that the president seek a Soviet-U.S. ban before testing America's ASAT against a space target. The House has voted to bar such tests for another year, if Moscow also refrains. But the administration is pressing a Senate amend-ment to permit tests if the president merely certifies that he is seeking strict limitations on ASATs. Only if the House stands firm and insists on retarding flight tests can the chances for negotiating a total ban be preserved.

The Emperor Has Spoken

General Augusto Pinochet, Chile's president, does not often talk to the press. Now we know why. In an interview (IHT, Aug. 9) he compares himself to the "best Roman emperors," claiming a gift for applying military tac-tics and secrecy to political decisions. "I don't have confidence in orthodox democracy," General Pinochet asserted. "To me, what is white is white, and what is black is black." Blackly, he intends to stay in power at least until 1989, permitting no elections before then.

The general's martial philosophy has been law for 11 years in what was once one of Latin America's finest democracies. Initially many saw him as a savior for leading the military coup that deposed President Salvador Allende, a Marxist elected at the head of a leftist coalition including Communists. After a period of turmoil, General Pinochet brought order to street and factory and renewed economic growth. The middle classes were courted with wide-open market capitalism and the poor consoled with record levels of social spending.

Concentration camps and torture for some Chileans and the loss of democracy for all were the tolerated price. A 1980 plebiscite, even allowing for the repressive conditions of the vote, must be said to have given the general's authoritarian constitution the endorsement he sought. But the economic boom has since collapsed, and so has General Pinochet's political stature. Huge demonstrations last year for democracy brought out the police and the army with guns drawn, and still more restrictive laws. The opposition is now in retreat, but the government is isolated.

Like other Latin American nations, Chile faces a debt crisis, and the Pinochet regime is poorly positioned to demand still greater austerity. Military governments elsewhere are in retreat, having shattered the myth that generals are good economic managers. As in Argentina, Bolivia and Brazil, military rule and its patronage in Chile invited corruption, the light of capital and economic distortions.

Despite General Pinochet's boast of the best-ever relations between Chile and the United States, the Reagan administration has been sensitive to his excesses. Its appeals for human rights have not been as vocal or forthright as those of the Carter administration, but the Pinochet government obviously enjoys less sympathy in Washington than the democratic government of Argentina. And the attitude is colder still in Congress, which remembers Chile's refusal to extradite officials implicated in a 1976 Washington terror bombing.

Because Chile remains something of an international pariah and its government must worry about its major creditors and copper customers, Washington can still influence Emperor Pinochet's planning. Used properly, that influence might even restore his faith in "orthodox democracy." Pressing the point would at least be a fitting affirmation of our own.

Population: Argument Settled

The great debate on the relationship between population growth and socioeconomic development which nearly broke up the Bucharest conference [10 years ago] has now been laid to rest. It is universally recognized today that the quality of life has a direct bearing on the population growth rate of a nation and vice versa. Rapid population growth is now accepted as both a cause and an effect of poverty.

It has also been generally conceded that birth control and socioeconomic change are closely interrelated, and one cannot succeed without the other. Family planning services will be of limited use unless they are related to measures designed to provide health care, impart literacy, reduce infant and maternal mortality and improve the status of women. But the socioeconomic development of a people by itself does not cut down the population growth rate to the desired extent; it has to be accompanied by a vigorous family planning drive.

With the basic importance, benefits and underlying principles of a population program being so very evident, it is indeed intriguing why many countries have failed to lower their population growth rates.

Until Nixon Apologizes ...

Ten years after he resigned the presidency in disgrace after Watergate, [Richard Nixon] is enjoying a political resurrection. The cautious and shrewdly managed inching into the limelight is testimony to an extraordinary resilience of character which, though not proof of moral virtue, is nonetheless impressive. It poses, however, a problem for Americans. How is this nation, which regards itself as uniquely virtuous among the powers, to respond to a politician, undoubtedly of the first rank, who refuses to apologize for his breach of trust and who may even, in his proud and aloof way, nurse a sense of grievance?

It seems that most Americans, including many who admire Mr. Nixon's conduct of the presidency before Watergate, take the view that to understand all is not to forgive all. Perhaps they note, too, that the stable structure of hardheaded détente, which Mr. Nixon forged, depended upon a strong presidency, which Watergate destroyed. They may, in the end, admire the statesman. But their admiration for the man will not be restored until he finds the strength of his remarkable character to apologize to them without reserve.

1909: Aeroplanes Will Be on Show PARIS - It is barely three years since M. Santos-Dumont made the first officially-controlled flight in Europe. At the end of August, 1906, the world smiled at the idea of the huge box kite being able to rise under the impulsion of a motor-driven propeller. At the end of August, 1909, the doubters expect to see aeroplanes remain aloft several hours, and the possibilities are that during Aviation Week at Rheims their expectations will be realized. At the Rheims races the battle will be fought between the biplane and the monoplane. The biplane holds the endurance record but has ceased to be a favorite, the recent exploits of the Antoinette and Bleriot machines having

It is pointed out that part of the President's long-range monetary policies is lization of silver which would make trading with the Far East easier, particularly where gold countries are concerned. With the United States taking the lead, it is felt that other commercial nations will follow suit.

Taxes and Arms: Prime Issues for the Campaign

N EW YORK — President Reagan and the Democratic presidential candidate, Walter Mondale, have established the first subject for their campaign debates, which the White House must know cannot be avoided. But they have not gone beyond setting the topic. So far, their ex-change on whether there will have to be a tax rise after elections has had a through-the-looking-glass unreality. "You will!" "I won't!" They both know that is not the choice. They both acknowledge that the deficit has to be reduced, and that the only way is to increase government revenues and cut government spending. Incredibly, the biggest economy in the world is getting into the debtor situation of a developing country. As anybody trying to buy a house knows, if mortgage payments are too high, there isn't enough for maintenance and other needs.

So the choices have to be how to boost income and where to save. The public needs a full exposi-tion of their calculations from both candidates even before the debates, so that conflicting claims can be assessed. Failure to provide it would diminish their credibility.

Mr. Reagan says that recovery will generate enough tax money to reverse the burgeoning debt without slashing vital needs, if Congress agrees to pare away fat. The one thing economists agree on now is that their crystal balls are cloudy, but they don't even venture the hope that such a huge boom as Mr. Reagan's scenario would require could be achieved without another bust. Wall Street takes this matter seriously. It spurted upward with the news that growth was By Flora Lewis slowing down, because that improves the chance that growth can be sustained.

Mr. Mondale says that more money will have to be raised but that he will not put the burden on the middle classes and the poor. Soak-the-rich by itself would not be enough either, and frighten-ing business out of domestic investment with too much tax would send memployment back up.

This means there will also have to be callings on big spending. The mounting debt service cannot be lowered without dropping the deficit. Mr. Reagan has already chopped at social services, but his cuts have not begun to deliver the budget balance that he promised. On the con-trary. What more has he in mind? Social Security? Education? Farm subsidies? Definitely not nilitary spending, he says; that must keep rising. Mr. Mondale has been brave about taxes, which are never music to a voter's ear. But he has been coy about spending. He, too, would have to propose cuts. He has probably read the electorate's mood correctly in promising not to weaken defense. But Mr. Reagan's record shows that vast military spending means vast debt, whether with more growth and lower taxes or, as Mr. Mondale suggests, more taxes and slower growth.

The lesson of the Vietnam War is often cited in terms of military adventure, but there was another, in terms of economic adventure. The stimulusof military spending is an illusion. It may prime the pump for a while, but it depletes the well. The (inflation) or constricting it (recession).

The defense issue has been aggravated by the foolish idea that security is measured in dollars.

President Johnson made the mistake of thinking that social problems could be solved by "throw ing money" at them. It is as much of a mistake to think that "throwing money" buys strength.

Despite denials, there is strong evidence that American combat readiness has deteriorated. Richard Halloran of The New York Times (IHT, Left, 22) has most denials and the strength of the New York Times (IHT, Left, 22) has most denials and the strength of the New York Times (IHT, Left, 22) has most denials and the strength of the New York Times (IHT, Left, 22) has most denials and the strength of the New York Times (IHT, Left, 22) has most denials and the strength of the New York Times (IHT, Left, 22) has not denial to the New York Times (IHT, Left, 22) has not denials and the New York Times (IHT, Left, 22) has not denials and the New York Times (IHT, Left, 22) has not denials at the New York Times (IHT, Left, 22) has not denials and the New York Times (IHT, Left, 22) has not denials at the New York Times (I

July 23) has rooted out studies to show that America has bought a lot more weapons but not the capacity to use them. Since 1981 the administration has had authority to spend $888.8 billion on defense, but the Joint Chiefs, senior field commanders, officers down the line and House investigators say that current deficiencies could leave the forces unable to fight a major enemy.

Taxes and the deficit cannot be addressed without questioning the defense budget. And the real security issue cannot be judged without a close look at where the military's money goes. Senators Gary Hart and Sam Nunn and Representatives Les Aspin and Albert Gore Jr., all outspoken in criticism of the nation's military machine and defense policy, have some good ideas on the subject and should be listened to.

The way money is being spent for America's defense should be the subject of the second debate; then other subjects should follow. If the candidates are made to explain facts, this should be an enlightening campaign.

Once Upon a Time, Democrats Had a World Vision

By Charles William Maynes

WASHINGTON — Charles de Gaulle once wrote that France could not be France without grandeur. Reading recent party platforms, and particularly the Democratic platform endorsed in San Francisco, one wonders if America can be America with only a laundry list. For de Gaulle, grandeur was to be found by asserting a special French place in the world. If France failed to assert that presence, de Gaulle feared that France would become simply a large Liechtenstein. America may need a de Gaulle, for at this point both parties fail to provide it vision. Ronald Reagan promotes nostal-gia instead. The only president in postwar history to seek re-election without any significant foreign policy successes, he would seem uniquely vulnerable to challenge.

The criticism is likely to be that the president has brought America closer to nuclear war, that his proposals for ballistic-missile defense - the socalled star wars program — will cost hundreds of billions and leave the nation no more secure, that he has moved too close to South Africa and not close enough to Israel, even that he has overlooked the Irish problem.

There are powerful constituencies in America ready individually to ap-pland each one of these charges. But is there any theme that brings all of these groups together as Americans? In the past the Democratic Party one's goal may be, both parties seem forced back to a realpolitik approach to international affairs that, over the iong pull, does not seem to appeal to the American people, who demand a sense that they are working toward the creation of a better tomorrow.

The president, although the least intellectual inhabitant of the White House since World War II, has a feel httle content to his vision.

America as the New Jernsalem has been a powerful symbol throughout American history. Wilson drew on its power when he outlined a world role hat appealed to democratic and idealistic instincts. Making the world safe for democracy could summon up energies that a struggle for interna-tional markets could not.

That these idealistic energies are still there to be tapped is shown by recognizable need among its more to be tapped is shown by the way the country, almost with unanimity, rose up to condemn the Rea-gan administration's unlawful decision to mine Nicaragua's harbors. Some believe that releasing this George Kennan and Walter Lippmann have written trenchant critiques of the American approach todiplomacy. Some see the folly of Vietnam as the end result of Wilson's idealism. No one can deny some of these shortcomings; they are part of the historical record. Yet America's shortcomings are relative. No country is perfect. Thequestion to pose is the following: Which approach to international affairs — that of greater Germany, socialist Soviet Union, imperial Japan or democratic America - has resulted in the greatest degree of freedom for others? Which approach to international affairs has resulted in the highest cost for others? Ronald Reagan, with his poor for-eign policy record and extravagant rhetoric, has failed in his first term to appeal to America's better side. If Walter Mondale can strengthen the country's better instincts with a foreign policy vision worthy of the support of all Americans, he may have an election issue after all.

WASHINGTON - There is hardheaded case to be an VV hardheaded case to be make against efforts to help Afghanistics freedom fighters. The level of aid that can be delivered discreetly cannot be decisive, so all one is doing a building false hope and prolonging the agony to no effect other than in make Soviet "pacification" more costly, and also more brutal.

An opposite view assumes that the Soviets are hurting from the cost of the war and at the hands of world opinion, particularly Moslem opinion. If the cost to the Soviets could be made sufficiently severe, this argument goes, there could be hope for some sort of diplomatic solution.

This purpose assumes that adequate amounts of the right kinds of arms can be delivered through the principal conduit, Pakistan, without putting the Pakistanis at grave risk of Soviet retaliation.

There is the tricky part. The Soviets know perfectly well what is going on, but that does not mean they will accept indefinitely Pakistan's ritual denials. This is all the more so if the United States not only increases its aid but boasts about it. We are talking then, about the need for a certain subtlety. And yet, there it was in The Wall Street Journal last week: "House Panel Votes to Give Afghan Rebels $50 Million in Coyert Help, Sources Say."

The story under the headline said that the House Appropriations Committee had "secretly attached $50 million for covert aid to Afghan rebels," according to "intelligence sources." Confirming the report, The Washington Post credited "congressional sources." By nightfall the story was all over the television news.

Not the least of the questions this. raises is whether America, havingreached a certain manurity in the early postwar years about the way to handle this sort of thing, has been reduced to a second childhood by the torrid revelations of congressional in-vestigations of the CIA in 1975.

vestigations of the CIA in 1975.

The word "covert" means, well, covert—if you're going to do it at all. Yet we read in the Democratic Party platform a promise to support the efforts of the Afghanistan freedom fighters with "material assistance." Those trigger words come straight, from a heavily co-sponsored resolution now before Congress. It was introduced in 1982 by Senator Paul Tsongas, the Massachusetts Democrat. Now the senator is apparently having second thoughts about how, hard to press it. The U.S. effort in Afghanistan is considerably bigger today and the sensitivities of the Pakistanis have become a good deal more acute. But, having signed on, a lot of co-sponsors are uncomfortable with the idea of signing off on their devotion to freedom lighters. You could argue that none of this matters when you consider how much of the so-called covert program has found its way into the news. Perhaps the most striking example is a Time magazine account a couple of months

He is prone to talk of America as of precisely what weapons the ca as the city on the hill, but he offers CIA is providing, and the exact supply routes -- even the way land mines were disguised as "telephone equip-ment for a religious organization." It is hard to believe that such minutiae could have been gathered without help from the agency in charge, the CIA. It is also hard to believe that these suspected CIA leaks are uprelated to a tendency in the Reagan administration to flamt its anti-Communist fervor — that is, to a pronounced ideologues for the psy-chic income, so to speak, that comes from the whole world knowing.

The Kinetic Conceptions of Pol Bury

By John G. H. Oakes PERDREAUVILLE, France —
Calling artist Pol Bury "taciturn" is like calling water wet. The Belgian sculptor is not a man of superlatives. Here, an hour or so outside Paris, in the farmhouse that Bury and his American wife have converted into an atelier, he seems at ease, content to let a visitor wander about and experience his work The house and grounds are hamned by the barely perceptible sounds of clicking, twitching mechanical sculptures. The parquetry of a wooden table sighs and breathes gently, bronze cubes and balls move mysteriously on their board. A pair of old shoes -- empty -make the motions of walking.

Hailed as the inheritor of the Calder tradition, Bury, 62, has set today's standard for the definition of kinetic - moving or movable aft. "My work is formal," Bury said, meaning that he is concerned with forms. "It is not symbolic."

But this is abstraction with a human face - the face may be the viewer's, staring back in the highly polished metallic surfaces of one of Bury's sculptures. "I want to give back the image, but changed," he said. "I want the viewer to see his own image transformed. "It's the same old problem of art," he continued, explaining his current interest in reflective surfaces. "I am trying to give a new angle, to see things in a new way." The language of shifting perspectives — art in motion — has been important to him throughout his

He is wary of success. "I think the danger for an artist is to get too repetitive," he said. A writer with a against the "aesthetocracy" of the art market in his latest book, titled "Les Gaités de l'esthetique" (The Gaiety of Aesthetics). I try to amuse myself and not to worry what's in fashion."

As a young painter, Bury allied himself with the Surrealists. In 1950, after a few years as a partici-pant in the COBRA (for Copenha-gen, Brussels and Amsterdam) group — the postwar revitalization of Surrealism to which such artists as Pierre Alechinsky, Karel Appel and Asger Jorn belonged — Bury saw a Calder exhibit at the Galerie Maeght and became an instant convert to kinetic art. He brought to it his spontaneity and wry hu-mor, both of which had been nur-

... tured by Surrealism. From the early 1950s, he experimented with various forms of movement in art, crossing the boundary between sculpture and painting with his "Mobile Planes," his first works of kinetic art. One colored shape was laid on another, on a single axis, permitting a spectator to rearrange the work.

.Combining a Surrealist's fascination with the strangeness of evcryday life and his newfound pasexperimented with "distortions," photographic representations of fa-miliar objects — New York's Gug-genheim Museum, the Statue of Liberty, the Eiffel Tower, or human faces, rearranged and twisted. The result is at once disturbing and Soon Bury was incorporating small motors in his works. It was in this period, the early 1960s, that he gave up painting, moved to France and concentrated on sculpting. For Bury, painting after Yves Klein is "superfluous."

"Since we arrived at monochrome painting, I believe we can't go much further," he said. (He doesn't mind talking generalities, although talking about his own work seems to pain him.) Even before Klein, he said, the end was in sight for painting "Art changed totally with the advent of photography. Before photography, painting had to tell a story. Now, it's just

""Sculpture takes more time." he said. He still does occasionally look to painting, however, as in a recent mirror sculpture that is "inspired by, but not commenting on" the work of his friend Alechinsky.

Bury clearly relishes the technical aspects of his art, which oblige him to take into account not only color, form and the dimensions of the place his work is commissioned for --- much is tailored for a particular spot - but also the machines hat drive it. "I had to invent them all," he said of the engines that distribute water at the right intervals, raise lower, turn or shake his sculptures. Yet machines are not art. "I'm not really interested in machines," he said. "I want people to forget that machines run the crument secrets, a murdered scien-

The declared purpose of the current exhibition, devoted to the glassware produced by Charles Schneider in the workshop near Paris that he and his brother Ernest ran from 1913 to 1940, is not commercial. The exhibition space is managed by the leasing concern that rents the individual shops to the dealers. But the exhibitions have nothing to do with the dealers.

This kind of objective survey of a craftsman's activity is seldom provided in museum shows. It probably won't harm the commercial fate of Schneider's production. Nowadays the main condition for success is a label, and the Louvre des Antiquaires show has put Schneider on

Two pieces were bought by a German collector who was, by contrast, a connoisseur. He acquired in particular a footed bowl, a type that was not yet represented in hiscollection.

There must be large numbers of Schneider pieces in private hands. Extraordinary Drawings of Watteau on Show in Washington

By John Russell
New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — Something extraordinary in the way of an exhibition of paintings and drawings can be seen at the National Gallery in Washington. It includes a figure of Pierrot that is one of the most poignant studies of alienation to be found in all European paint-ing. It also includes a direct and ntimental evocation of what it feels like to be a wounded soldier who has been left behind after a battle, and some investigations of beggary that can rank with Rembrandt. It ends with a former shop sign that has come to be regarded as one of the most beautiful pictures that ever was painted. The author of these works, and of everything else in the show, is Antoine Watteau (1684-1721), who for many people is a painter of dainty little pictures, all silks and satins and stylized flirtations, that belong to an age long vanished and not always regretted.

And, of course, it is perfectly true that Watteau originated what looks at first glance to be a world of artificial comedy in which no dress is ever worn twice and all couples pair off happily. If the action takes place in the open air, as it often does, mosquitoes will never have been heard of and the grass beneath the lovers is always sweet, and soft, and dry. There are paintings like this in the exhibit, and very seductive many of them are.

But the case of Watteau is like the case of his near-contemporary Marivaux. What looks to be merely elegant turns out to touch on every note in the gamut of human feeling and to make them all sing out in time. Watteau was as sensitive to the tongue-tied lover, whom not even Cupid himself could bring to the point of declaration, as he was to the coarseness, the failures of judgment and the lumbering deceptions for which no amount of superfine tailoring can make up.

It is also important to know that Watteau had seen at first hand what it was to be bundled off to the wars as an apprentice soldier. He had also seen at first hand what it was like to have nothing to eat, to have your savings reduced to noth-ing by a scoundrel, and to come back minus a leg from one of the most ghastly of recorded battles. He had seen men walk in terror of plague, and seen others reduced by famine to cannibalism. Though a careful student of high fashion

A great Watteau exhibition must also suggest that Watteau was a Parisian by adoption. In fact he got to Paris when he was 16 and lived there for much of the rest of his life. He arrived at the time when Parisian taste was displacing the taste of Versailles and the Parisian theater was a world in full ebullition, with new forms, new faces, new stock characters, new rules and regnlations and a new impact upon

> LOS ANGELES - Daley Thompson missed the world record in the decathlon by one point Thursday night but won his second straight Olympic gold medal in the event with 8,797 points.

> In one of those twists of figures that make track and field incomprehensible to the common man; Thompson will become the world record holder off this performance on April 1, when revised tables for the decathlon go into effect.

Thompson, representing Britain, did not much care about the record. "I was never coming for the world son hid it well, taking a victory lap record," he said. "All I wanted to while he waved a British flag to the do was to win. The world record wasn't so important here."

South Africa Sends Team Of Spectators

LOS ANGELES -- South Africa, banned from competing in the Olympics, has sent 25 of its top athletes to watch the Games, in which two former South African citizens, Zola Budd and Sydney Maree, have been touted as medal contenders. The athletes were flown to Los Angeles by the South African Amateur Athletics Union, headed by Charles Nieuwoudd.

Maree, a black who recently took U.S. citizenship, withdrew from the 1,500-meter track race because of injury. Budd, a white who is now a British subject, qualified for the women's 3,000-meter final. Among the South Africans in the crowd are Ernest Seleke, a marathon runner, and Peter Ngobeni, a sprinter both world-class athletes.

South Africa has not been permitted to compete in the Olympicssince 1960 because of its policy of apartheid. Nieuwoudd said he had no plans to meet International Olympic Committee officials in Los Angeles, and when asked if he had any cause for optimism about -South Africa returning to the Olympic movement, he replied: "None whatsoever." The state of the s Greek sports officials are upset because the former King Constantine of Greece was announced as the "King of Greece" in front of 12,500 spectators at an Olympics awards ceremony. The monarchy officially was abolished in Greece by a referendum in December 1974, in which Greeks voted to es-«tablish a parliamentary republic.

Constantine, a gold medal-win-,ning yachtsman in 1960, presented the gold, silver and bronze medals to the women's volleyball teams of China, the United States and Japan on Wednesday.

U.S. Wrestlers Warned for Brutality

Mark Schultz of the United States pinned Resit Karabachak of Turkey in 30 seconds in their 1801/2pound weight class bout. But wrestling officials Thursday set aside the victory, ruling that Schultz had used an illegal arm lock against Karabachak, who suffered a fractured elbow. Both Schultz and his brother, Dave, were charged with "excessive brutality" after sending their opponents to the hospital. A special official was assigned to monitor their matches. Dave Schultz, competing at 163 pounds, had pinned Savan Sejdi of Yugoslavia, who suffered a knee injury. The dispute was the only bad news for U.S. freestyle wrestlers. Bobby Weaver pinned his 1051/2-pound opponent, Takashi Irie of Japan, for one gold, Randy Lewis outscored Kosei Akaishi of Japan in the 1361/2-pound class for a second; and Ed Banach completed the sweep, beating Japan's Akira Ohta in the 198-pound class.

And Willie DeWit, a Canadian heavyweight, won his fight, 3-2, over Arnold Vanderlijde of the Netherlands. But this time the jury upheld the decision by a 5-0 count. After his loss to O'Sullivan, Tiozzo cried in the ring, but insisted on coming to the news conference to ask U.S. journalists if they thought he won the fight. In Archery, Unranked Competitor From Indonesia Hits the Bull's Eye

Los Angeles Times Service

LOS ANGELES - In 1957, O.K. Smathers paid his way to the world archery championships in Prague because he failed to make the U.S. team. Then he made the trip worth the overseas investment: He won the world title

In 1983, Belgium's Marnix Vervinck finished eight points behind Darrell Pace and Rick McKinney of the United States to place third in the world championships though he had never shot among the world's best before.

It happens at every major tournament: An unknown blossoms into a contender. And the 1984 Olympic archery tournament is no different. The man who has stirred the emotions of the experts is Indonesia's Suradi Rukimin, who is in sixth place after the first of two FITA (International Archery Federation) rounds were completed Thursday.

He is only eight points from third place Hiroshi Yamamoto of Japan. Rukimin, 25, an architecture student, hails from Ujung Pandang on the island of South Sulawesi. He had the advantage of living near the island's only archery field where his brother-in-law was coaching. But he had never met an international field before the start of Wednesday's Olympic competition.

"I had never even heard of him," said Pace, the two-day leader.
"Guys come out of nowhere in this kind of competition."

This is very important for our national association for me to shoot at a high level" said Rukimin, whose best is a respectable 2,465. "I'm not nervous at all about competing against Pace and McKinney. I knew who they were before I came, but I worry about the target, not

But even Indonesia's coach, Edward Rahantoknam, is surprised by his archer's performance. Rukimin's highest placing at a major tournament was fourth at the Asian Games last year.

"Because this is a big competition, there is a mental situation," Rahantoknam said. "This is why I think it is surprising that he is doing so well. But he has the talent."
Said U.S. Coach John Williams: "Because archery is an individual sport there's always room for someone to pop up. But I don't think anyone is going to catch Darrell and Rick. I came in thinking they would run away from everybody and they are."

Despite Trade Deficit, U.S. Retains Ability to Compete

By LEONARD SILK

New York Times Service

EW YORK - Has the United States lost its ability to with the U.S. trade deficit having ballooned to an annual rate of $103.8 billion during the first half of this year, far above last year's record total of $61.1 billion, worries persist that the sudden surge of optimism on Wall Street is ignoring the persistent troubles of the real economy.

But a new study by the New York Stock Exchange, directed by its chief economist, William C. Freund, contends that the U.S.

trade position is much stronger than is generally believed and that the merchandise-trade deficit, which has been growing for the past 11 years, is not an adequate measure of the nation's performance in international

For one thing, the balance of trade, relating exports to imports, does not directly address the level or rate of increase in exports. For instance, between 1964 and 1970, when the United States ran a trade surplus, its exports rose at an annual rate of 4.9 percent. But between 1976 and 1982, when the United States ran deficits, its exports rose 5.8 percent a year. The deficits were caused by a still faster rise in imports. But a rise in U.S. imports reflects many things other than the industrial proficiency of the nation, especially the rising value of the dollar and the greater rate of growth of the U.S. economy than that of its trading partners. Faster growth here draws in imports from a heard or partners. imports from abroad and creates a bigger home market for many products, while slower growth abroad, combined with the rising dollar stemming from higher interest rates, restrains U.S. exports.

A rise in imports reflects many things in addition to industrial proficiency.

Further, if petroleum exports and imports are excluded, the .United States ran a nonpetroleum trade surplus every year from 1973 through 1982. In 1983, with the balance of merchandise trade showing a total deficit of $60.6 billion, petroleum imports were $58.6 billion and the nonpetroleum trade deficit was only $2

Although a few American industries lost ground — notably, steel, autos, textiles and shoes - the study finds that nearly half of 40 United States industry groups had a larger share of world exports in 1982 than in 1972. It says that 23 groups had the largest or second-largest share of world exports in 1982 against 22 in 1972, and imports fell as a share of the U.S. market in 12 groups, with the increase in import penetration 3 percentage points or less in an additional 15 of the 40 groups.

ob losses resulting from foreign-trade factors, the study concludes, have been exaggerated. Fourteen industry groups gained 525,000 jobs as a result of foreign trade. Twenty-six groups lost 1.1 million jobs, but 650,000 of the job losses were concentrated in four industries: apparel; shoes and leather, iron and steel, and motor vehicles. Eliminating those four groups, U.S. foreign trade added 64,000 jobs from 1972 to 1982. Is "smokestack America" dying? Definitely not, the stock-exchange study concludes, especially in terms of employment. To be sure, shifts from goods to services are going on. The goods-producing sector provided 46 percent of all jobs and 57 percent of producing sector provided 46 percent of all jobs and 57 percent of output in 1982, compared with 50 percent and 60 percent. respectively, in 1972, and 57 percent and 63 percent in 1962.

But this relative decline of the goods industries appears to be no cause for concern. Rather, the shift from primary production (agriculture and mining) to secondary production (manufacturing), and then from secondary to tertiary (services) was explained and predicted half a century ago by Colin Clark, the Australian primary and secondary production continues? Using an interin-dustry model developed by Clopper Almon at the University of Maryland, the study finds that growth should be sufficient to meet job needs and bring down the unemployment rate by 1995. Price Decline Sets Back Recovery Of the U.S. Aluminum Industry

By Daniel F. Cuff New York Times Service

NEW YORK - A potent recovery by the U.S. lluminum industry has been checked this summer by an unexpected fall in prices. The industry regained its feet in 1983 after its worst recession — several years of decreasing consumption and heavy losses — and began 1984 with high hopes.

Wall Street analysts urged investors to buy the wan street analysis niget investors to buy inc.
stocks of major aluminum companies and predicted heady results in a recovering economy. And the major companies did report strong first-half gains.
But the price of aluminum ingot began to weaken. According to J. Clarence Morrison, metals

WASHINGTON — U.S. wholesale prices rose a modest 0.3 percent in July after remaining flat since April, the Labor Department said Friday.

Although the Producer Price Index for finished goods rose slightly more last mouth than many economists expected, the increase during the first seven months of the year was at an annual rate of 2.9 percent, far below the 4- to 5-percent rate many economists had forecast at the beginning of the year. No. 5 in a Series First of Many Bia Rallies

The All Invest pools which are managed by specialists comprising the Performance Group have just flattened a round of call option positions which generated gains of 300 and 400 percent during the latest morket rolly. We expect, however, to be able to accomplish such extensive escalation of equity several more times before the new bull market's second leg has run its course. Short-sighted market players—and too many analysis-seem to conclude that every dip is the beginning of a crash and every rally puts the market at a new top. The truth is that bull market legs proceed in the manner of a field of horses running a steeplechase. Mounts which complete the first jump effectively of additional obstacles and troos before the end of the run-which in this case we feel will not be seen until early 1986. The hybrids in resources and technologies—such as Schlumberger-and "pure plays" such as Advanced Micro Devices are growth vehicles whose next eruptions we'll be covering in our next report to clients. Contact us or return the coupon for complimentary cov erage.

Trilogy Abandons 'Wafer Scale' Chip

By Thomas C. Haves New York Times Service LOS ANGELES - Trilogy Ltd. which gave up on its effort to produce a supercomputer last June, has abandoned plans to design, build, and market a high-speed "wafer scale" computer chip, Gene M. Amdahl, Trilogy's chairman, says the company will instead attempt to design and assemble circuit packages for computer manufacturers from conventional semiconductors. The decision to drop the wafer-scale chips, which aimed at packaging circuitry on one larger chip to equal the power of 100 smaller chips and thus speed data processing was not entirely a surprise. In June, a few days after Trilogy dropped plans for an innovative mainframe computer, the company said it would not be able to market the wafer chips before 1986. Analysts said the statement

Thursday indicated that Trilogy, once championed by Wall Street and many in the computer industry for daring to catapult ahead of International Business Machines Corp. in large-computer design, had reached its darkest hour. "It doesn't sound as if the prospects are terribly bright," said John Hart, head of professional services for International Data Corp. in Framingham, Massachusetis, a consulting company.

Mr. Amdahl said in his state- ty and coin-machinery concern, ment that Trilogy dropped the said it will consider the bid but semiconductor plans because, with described it as unwanted. so many companies now making semiconductors, "in-house semi-

$60-Million Gain For Carter Hawley

The sale, announced last month, was completed Thursday, the company said.

In addition, the company said it would charge about $5 million — or one-third — of the cost of its successful fight against a takeover by Limited Inc. against earnings for the second quarter ended July 28. That would leave the company with an after-tax cost of $3 million for that portion of the anti-take-over battle.

The Associated Press LOS ANGELES - Carter Haw-

sheet, plate, foil and piping. The major concern, said Nicholas C. Toufexis, an analyst at Op-penheimer & Co., is whether the weakness in ingot will "translate to the fabricated products."

Prices for these products have remained strong, Mr. Morrison said, up 22 percent from last year's levels. But in the last few months weakness has developed in common alloy grade, used in siding for houses and low-grade foil. In addition, Miss Jennings said that in July "we saw the first really sheet products in particular." These fabricated products, she said, have come under "intense import pressure," especially from Japan. "With the dollar's strength, it has made the U.S. a very attractive significant price reductions, in market. This is a relatively new factor."

Mr. Toufexis agreed that imports were a growing problem for U.S. producers even though there has At any rate, ingot represents only about 25 percent of the busidates 1978, when there were no aluminum trading markets in London and New York. There was no general information on pricing, and customers faced uncertainties about possible shortages. The aluminum industry is also international in nature. It seeks out global areas where electric power is the cheapest, because the electrolytic process by which aluminum is refined requires abundant energy. It also draws its ores from throughout the world.

Aluminum production has escaped the larger excesses of the Third World nations that produce and flood metal markets without regard to economic cycles. Brazil has aluminum operations, as does Ghana, but Ghana's hydroelectric facilities are currently shut down by drought. Kaiser Aluminum owns 90 percent of the Ghana op-eration. The remaining 10 percent is owned by Reynolds Metals.

U.S. Still Able To Compete

(Continued from Page 9) trend of 3.5 percent a year, the growth in jobs will be enough to bring the unemployment rate down to 4.5 percent by 1995, three points below where it is today. The reason: a slamdown in the growth of son: a slowdown in the growth of the labor force. The study contends that fears of unprecedented shifts to services and fears that the new jobs will be concentrated in lower-paying occupations are unwarranted. In 1995, according to the Maryland model, the top five occupations, in terms of numbers, will be: 5,387,000 teachers, np 23.9 percent from 1982; 3,936,000 sales clerks, up 30.1 percent; 3,876,000 custodians, up 33.5 percent; 2,031,000 farmers and farm workers, down 27 per-cent, and 3,520,000 doctors, nurses and other health workers, up 41.2

percent from 1982. Some jobs will have faster percentage growth up to 1995. The fastest growers will be cashiers, up 56.7 percent to 2,546,000.

Testing Executives' Competence

By Daniel Goleman New York Times Service

TEW YORK - Intelligence as measured by IQ tests may be related to success in school but it has surprisingly little to do with career achievement, according to a growing number of psycholo-

Their research has repeatedly shown that, although the best executives do at least moderately well on IQ tests, that ranking is not the factor that distinguishes the ones who advance from the ones who do not.

And yet successful career peo-ple presumably do a lot of thinking on their way to the top and after they get there.

This seeming paradox has impelled some psychologists to abandon the kind of intelligence that IO tests measure and search for something else. Some describe it as a measure of "practical intelligence." As the findings roll in, the psychologists suggest they may finally be on to an under-standing of mental processes that are critical in the world of work. Often, practical intelligence can be characterized as one's style or innate approach to problems, a subtle combination of thinking and behavior.

Recent research for instance suggests that the most successful executives think in a style that is cognitively complex, according to Siegfried Streufert of the Pennsylvania State University College of Cognitive thinking does not de-pend on IQ. Instead, it involves a combination of both intelligence and judgment.

The hallmarks of cognitive thinking, according to Streufert, include the ability to plan strategically without being rigidly locked into one course, the capacity to acquire information for decisionmaking without being overwhelmed, and being able to grasp relationships between rapidly changing events.

Unfortunately, executives who do not think that way are common, according to Streufert. They see problems individually and of-

however have the mental capacity, the temperament and the inclination to confront complexities even in small problems. They tend to plan long into the future, taking into account all possible events that can be anticipated, as well as the consequences of those events." Streufert wrote in Across the Board, a publication for exec-

Streufert assessed thinking styles in a simulated situation where executives spent several hours making decisions for a fictitious company based on such data as investments abroad, raw materials and the stability of foreign governments.

The best executives were better able to make connections between decisions and orchestrated an entire sequence of decisions toward a single crucial one. Such an executive, says Streufert, considers longterm consequences and sees multiple connections.

"Multidimensional thinking does not make much difference success at low or mid-level jobs," Streufert said, "but at the highest management levels it correlates with salary and position. It's particularly important in companies which operate in an environment where there is great uncertainty, and where an executive's every decision can make all the difference."

That research illustrates one of the central points made by Ulric Neisser, a psychologist at Emory University whose arguments against overemphasizing academic intelligence have influenced many people taking the new approach. "There are many ways for people to be smart," he said. "The ones IO tests measure are just a few out of hundreds."

In Neisser's view, the items on IQ tests are artificial and have little to do with a person's actual experience. What's more, he said, they are unlike most of the real problems people face because the information needed to solve them is available, they are well-defined and they have just one correct answer. Life is not that simple. David McClelland, a psycholo-

ten rigidly hold to a single overridgist at Harvard University, was one of the first to argue that it ing goal, such as profit.
The most-successful executives. makes more sense to test for competence than for intelligence.

McClelland, writing in the American Psychologist, criticized the practice of screening job ap-plicants with general intelligence tests that call on them to make analogies or correctly define words. "There are almost no occupations or life situations that require a person to do word analoies or choose the most correct of four alternative meanings of a word," McClelland wrote. He proposed, instead, that psychologists measure the actual competencies that make for success in a given job or career. One of the first efforts to do so was by McClelland and a group of colleagues at McBer, a Boston consulting firm.

In their approach, people who excel at a job are asked to describe key incidents they handled particularly well and several they han-dled poorly. The McBer psychologists then analyze the descriptions to find the underlying competencies that seem to make for outstanding performance.

In his book "The Competent Manager" Richard Boyatzis, a colleague of McClelland, identifies 19 competencies he found in a study of more than 2,000 managers. Among them are being able to get different groups to collaborate well, being able to spot hidden patterns in an array of facts, and a sense of spontaneity in expres-

These skills are not simply learned on the job. They involve a network of cognitive, emotional and motivational tendencies. For example, Boyatzis found that the best managers were high in the need for power, seeing themselves as important and hav ing a need to persuade and influence others regardless of the issue.

It is key competencies such as this that Richard Wagner and Robert Sternberg call practical intelligence. In an article to appear later this year in The Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, they describe results from studies of practical intelligence they have made among different professional groups.

Most of a person's practical intelligence, they contend, is tacit. Unlike classroom learning, it is not directly spoken about or taught. Such tacit knowledge is often piecemeal, hard to articulate and therefore relatively difficult to pass on.

Thus, according to George Klemp Jr., a psychologist who assesses job competencies at McBer, it is not enough to ask people what it takes to do a job well, since their ideas about excellence often miss the subtleties involved.

Klemp gives the example of a competence assessment of sales-people McBer did for a large retailer. Most salespeople, on being asked to name the characteristics of "supersalesmen," placed ag-gressiveness high on the list. "Our study found, however, that top sales professionals don't hustle people," Klemp said. "The less effective salespeople, by con-trast, tend to hustle people — all potential customers, regardless of the customers' level of interest." Because practical intelligence is tacit, Klemp said, "even the best job experts are often wrong in their assumptions about what qualities are necessary to do a job People acquire practical intelli-gence as best they can and people undoubtedly differ in the ability

To measure practical intelligence, Wagner and Sternberg devised descriptions of typical workrelated situations in which practical intelligence was important in making decisions.

In a test of business managers, for example, in one hypothetical situation, a division chief in a large company is seeking rapid promotion. He must choose among various strategies for do-resumed their kayak voyage to trace the roots of civilization in Greenland. The expedition leader, a Danish architect, John Andersen, 40, and his companion, Greenlander hunter Boas Madsen, 32, set out in early July, exploring the remains of 500-year-old settlements and cating walrus meat to survive in the first stage of the 800-mile (1,300kilometer) voyage. But a herd of about 100 enraged walruses and 40knot winds drove the men 50 nautical miles out to sea, where pack ice ounces and 3 pounds 9 ounces (1.) threatened to crush their delicate, and 1.7 kilos) at birth, a hospita specially designed kayak. They were forced to radio for help and were rescued by helicopter on July 27. The rescue cost nearly 200,000 Danish kroner (about $20,000), and although the voyagers were ready to leave two days later, they were required to stay two weeks at the Danmarkshavn weather station outpost awaiting funds to cover the costs of rescue insurance. In the first stage, they discovered three unrecorded Eskimo settlements from the 15th century, including a find in Andrup Land, the northernmost Eskimo ruin ever discovered in eastern Greenland.

Enquirer, claiming the tabloid printed a false story about the terms of his widely publicized divorce settlement. The cover story in ... the magazine's June 19 issue, headprivate investigation into Sunny's lined "Johnny Settles — Huge Pay-illness and took the case to the off for Joanna as Bitter Divorce Battle Ends," reported that Carson agreed to pay his third wife $2 million a month in a settlement that totaled between $32 million and $42 million. Carson's automeys would not discuss the lawsuit except to say that all the statements in the story were "totally false." Earlier reports on the out-of-court settlement, reached in February, indicated that Carson had agreed to pay Mrs. Carson about 10 percent Two women in the Los Angeles of her original demand of $220,000:
